Dear Mr. Page:

I am pleased to respond to your December 5, 2011, request to Human Resources and Skills Development Canada (HRSDC) on any cost estimates for Private Member's Bill C-291.

Please find HRSDC's response enclosed, which includes:

1. A description of the Private Member's Bill;
2. Information on any underlying assumptions made in interpreting and costing the Bill's proposed amendments;
3. The estimated numbers of persons affected by, and the financial costs of, the proposed amendments; and
4. A description of the methodology used in estimating the impact (persons and costs) of the proposed amendments and, where possible, supporting data and information.

A preliminary cost estimate of increasing the maximum entitlement for Employment Insurance (EI) sickness benefits from 15 to 50 weeks was first produced in the fall of 2010. When Bill C-291 was tabled on September 28, 2011, this estimate was revised to reflect more recent data on weekly EI benefit rates and to incorporate waiving the waiting period. The cost estimate for Bill C-291 was produced to provide the Government with a general sense of the financial magnitude of the proposed amendments.
